How did you start your career?

I started my career around 8 years ago in Colombia, South America. I started working in communication and events, advertising agencies and audio-visual production companies in the areas of marketing as an account executive and supporting a lot in the creative processes as a graphic designer and editor, mostly in branding.

Why did you choose a career at Deutsche Gesellschaft für Internationale Zusammenarbeit?

This was a unique opportunity, since GIZ is one of the most important development agencies in the world. I found out about this position thanks to the director of our programme, who sent the proposal to the students of last year. I chose GIZ because offered me the chance to apply my knowledge and experience in an international environment, it was the best way to start a career change focused on transformation and development.

What is your current role/duties?

My role consists in advice, and operationalize one of the GIZ projects in regards to communication. This is a project from the German Government and the African Union. My deliverables are related with specific goals associated with external communication (stakeholder management, branding, raise awareness, sustainable reputation, etc.) and internal communication (crises management, flow of communication, etc.)

In your opinion, what are the qualities necessary for a successful career at Deutsche Gesellschaft für Internationale Zusammenarbeit?

I think it is very important to acknowledge that achieving a successful career (in any company) is a process where you learn to understand along the way which are your strengths and weaknesses; being conscious about it makes a great difference. Many times our career becomes a “forest of forking paths” where we can make many decisions, but being patient and resilient are our best compasses.
